

Flat Stanley's Dilemma

One ordinary day Stanley Lambchop anxiously got washed and dressed, ready for the day ahead of him. It was his first day at school after his unfortunate accident. About three weeks ago Stanley was having a really nice dream about him being a football star! Suddenly, a pin board that was hanging on the wall fell on top of him! When he woke up he said to himself, "I wonder what's new today?" But that is when he realised he was flat! Stanley had 3 freckles on each cheek, ginger hair and he was half an inch thick. He was extremely worried about what his friends would think.

Stanley started to dordle to school because he was a bit nervous. When he arrived at the school gates he saw his friends playing football and basketball. Then his best friend started to laugh and point at him and whispered, "Look at Stanley, he looks stupid because he's flat!" Stanley felt worried and silly because of what his friend said.

As quick as a flash, the bell rang. Stanley dashed into class, he went and sat in his usual seat next to his best friends. His friends started to joke about his flatness. Stanley felt left out, lonely, heartbroken and cheerless. Stanley felt sad, they were his only friends. He felt very uncomfortable in this position and he was wishing they would soon be friends again because they were his only friends and his best friends.

After the bell rang, Stanley strolled up to the deputy head teacher's office and politely knocked on the door. The teacher opened the door and Stanley said, "All my friends are bullying me because I'm flat and different!" The teacher mentioned that it's ok to be different and said, "I will have a word with your friends."

Stanley's friends said sorry and hey learned that everybody is different and you shouldn't bully because of it. Stanley's friends felt bad, cruel and selfish because of what they did. In the end they were all together again!
